JEFFERSON SCHOOL DISTRICT GRADUATES RECEIVE DIPLOMAS

This week records the ending of the school year in the elementary schools of this district. All the promotions, from the kindergarten to the Eighth grade, have been made.

Teachers and children have worked hard during the extra long year, and as a consequence there are not many left behind. Nearly everyone has earned the right to enjoy his or her vacation. A feeling of general satisfaction prevails and the concensus of opinion is that the schools have done their part fairly well.

From the Eighth grade everyone who took the final test has been awarded a diploma of graduation by the County Board of Education. The leader of each school has been awarded a prize of five dollars from the good angel, and the best in current events in each class has been identified with a Davis bronze medal from the Current Events Publishing Co.

The leaders are as follows: Crocker Tract school, Maxine Smith; Woodrow Wilson school, Mary J. Collins; Jefferson school, Colma, Mary L. Conti, Sarah Lucas, Rose Merlo.

COUNCIL REQUESTED TO OPEN NEW STREET

At the regular meeting of the City Council last Monday evening all the members of the Council, the city attorney and city engineer were present, Mayor H. H. Smith presiding.

A communication from the Fire Commissioners, asking for an ordinance that would give the commissioners the power to grant permits on the storage of gasoline or other explosives, was referred to the ordinance committee.

The Fire Commissioners also requested the Council to deny a permit for a garage at 6718 Mission street, claiming that the building is not constructed for that purpose.

The Municipal Traffic League of California asked the Council to send a delegate to meet with that organization at the City Hall in San Francisco on July 18, 19 and 20. This matter was referred to the police committee.

City Attorney J. E. McCurdy asked for permission to leave for a vacation in Alaska, stating that he would have some on take care of the legal work of the city during his absence. The request was granted.

The Pacific Coast Building Conference notified the Council that the new uniform building code would be ready soon for the approval of the building committee.

A letter from the Veteran' Welfare Board, regarding exemption of certain property in their possession from taxation, was placed in the hands of the tax collector and the city attorney.

The request of the Butchers' Union for an ordinance to close all meat shops on Sundays was laid over for two weeks, this action being at the request of the butchers' committee.

There being no protests, the weed ordinance was passed to final vote.

Many representatives of the property bounded by Mission, Brunswick and Acton streets and Templeton avenue were present, asking the city to start legal action to open Irvington street between Acton street and Templeton avenue. This the Council considered called for more thought, and the city clerk was instructed to request all those concerned to be present on Monday evening, June 18, at the City Hall, when a mutual agreement will be attempted first, before a possible long drawn out and costly legal ction is started.

The chief of police was instructed to stop the sale and use of all fireworks, as this is against the city ordinance.

The next meeting of the City Council will be held on June 25.

THEN AND NOW

It must be interesting for the early settlers of Daly City to look around them now, and then just turn the pages of memory back to the early days of this community. It is probable that even the most optimistic did not dream of the results of the steady growth that has followed the first real building in Daly City, and did not, therefore, foresee that the still steadily growing district of today would be the result of years of faith in investment and building and developing both business and residential possibilities in this city—in the Crocker Tract, in the whole of the Vista Grande and Hillcrest Tracts, and other sections, and now in the development on Hillside Boulevard, which opens up a new section which, with its unsurpassed marine view, and its direct communication with South San Francisco, its sheltered slopes, and its splendid type of new homes, will bring to a definite climax the growth of the finest municipality of its size in the state of Calfornia.

Compare the pictures shown on this page. On the one hand, Daly City, at the top of the hill, as it appeared when the first street car arrived. And on the other, the type of home being constructed in Daly City at the present time. Lots in the Sunset and Richmond districts may be higher in price, on account of boom conditions, which at best are not healthy, but home construction is no better there than here, and the type of residents that are daily settling in our midst are of a character which would be welcomed in the finest residential districts in San Francisco.

Why? Because we have everything that is good to offer the new-comer. Our now really first class business district, where one may obtain the finest of products at down-town prices. We have our neighborhood stores that are able to supply us with special bargains equal to those found in the lower Mission and further down town. Our bakeries supply the weary shopper with fresh, uncrushed pies and cakes, as they alight from the cars; our markets give us the finest of edibles at most reasonable prices, so that there is no longer any reason why we should not earnestly adopt the slogan "Shop and Save in Daly City."

Our schools are 100 per efficiently administered; our faculty in general is one chosen, both in the grade schools and the high school, carefully and with the ultimate perfection of the scholars' education in view. Our general health conditions are ideal, and our water supply probably the best in the state. From a point of upkeep, we of this community are singularly free from heavy taxation due to construction period. Save for small improvements, such as our recent bonds for the shop at the high school, which will serve the city in more ways than one, and is a splendid addition, we are all through our assesments. So there is nothing but the brightest of futures in store for Daly City, with its old residents who have always been boosters, and its thousands of new residents, who are building, buying and occupying the new homes such as grace Daly City today.

SUPERVISORS CAN'T ACT AS A PLANNING BOARD, SAYS SWART

The supervisors of San Mateo county can not constitute themselves a county planning commission, the members of the board were informed last Monday by District Attorney Franklin Swart, who said that the act providing for county planning boards does not authorize supervisors to appoint themselves. The formation of the county commission was again postponed by the board, on the recommendation of Swart, who said that he doubts the constitutionality of the statutes authorizing county planning commissions.

District Attorney Swart was requested by the board to make a study of the plan as at present in operation in Los Angeles county, and he was authorized to make a trip to Southern California for that purpose. Santa Barbara county is the only other county in the state having a planning commission, Swart told the board.

NEW RATES MAKE ELECTRIC COOKING VERY ECONOMICAL

And then let the electric range do all the cooking

Every woman loves to cook—when the monotony of cooking is gone.

That is what the electric range does. It eliminates cooking monotony. Its harmonious white porcelain enamel makes kitchens attractive. Its perfect baking wins appetites. And its automatic time and temperature controls do the cooking while you're shopping or at the movies.

The oven of the new electric range heats up to 400 degrees in 9 to 11 minutes—as fast as one can mix biscuits. The open coil cooking elements are now made smaller to fit your pans. Heat that was formerly wasted goes to work. The result is, food cooks faster — less electricity is used.

See the new electric ranges today. Ask about our special low terms.

THE SPIRIT OF JEFFERSON

(Address delivered by Josephine Jensen at Jefferson Union high school commencement exercises.)

Of all the prominent men in our early history, Thomas Jefferson is the most difficult to classify. He was many sided, and his public life had many contradictions. His enemies pronounced him a doctrinaire, an impractical idealist, and a dreamer, and they were in some measure right. In consequence of his attempts to carry his ideas into practice, his work was not always successful.

Two theories had this dreamer. Both were vast in scope and revolutionary in the world of human government. To carry out these two he staked his reputation as a statesman, philosopher and politician. One was his belief that the nations of the world could live without war. In this belief he destroyed his ships and reduced his armies. For this belief he sacrificed his popularity, his fortune and many of his friends. What a sublime and admirable confidence in an untried theory. "World peace," we call it today. Jefferson failed in this, and the bitterness of his disappointment was known only to his own soul. A century has passed since then, and Jefferson's dream has become the hope of the world. The time will come—yes, if our civilization is to endure—the time will come when human warfare will be a thing of the past; when armies and navies will be needed no longer for destruction; when an enlightened world will reject the barbarous methods of a crude civilization of bygone ages. When that time comes, the dream of Thomas Jefferson will have been realized. His fame will have reached its height and he will be remembered not as a voice crying in the wilderness but as a prophet whose eyes saw far beyond the horizon which limited the vision of other men of his time.

The other principle to which the genius of Jefferson was devoted may expressed in the one word democracy. This was his chief ideal, and without this his type of statesmanship would have no excuse for existence.

Jefferson is, perhaps, the most prominent example of the philosophic politician that we find in American history. In the age when governments were established upon the theory that the kings ruled the common people by divine right, Jefferson declared his faith in the principle that the common people had a right to govern themselves. At a time when it was almost universally believed that few people were born to rule and that the mass of people were born to serve the rulers, he declared in those immortal words which he wrote into the Declaration of Independence, "All men are created equal." This is the philosophic principle on which his whole theory of government is rested. Today, whatever may be our practice in the daily workings of our government, the American people still hold fast to the principles of Jefferson as the foundation of their political faith.

But Jefferson went a step farther than the belief in the right of the people to govern themselves. He believed they possessed the ability to govern themselves wisely. In this he was opposed by the leaders of the Federalist party. Alexander Hamilton may be chosen as the chief opponent of Jefferson's political theories.

Selected by President Washington to serve in his first cabinet, these two men had many heated arguments as to the form our government should take in its early making. Hamilton believed that our government should be conducted by trained statesmen allied with large property owners. On one occasion in a heated argument when Jefferson was advocating the right of the common people to have some say in the government, Hamilton brought his fist down upon the table and shouted: "Your people, sir, is nothing but a great beast."

But no argument of Hamilton's, or any other member of the Federalist party, could shake Jefferson's faith in the common people. He believed not only in their ability to govern themselves, but in their honesty and common sense. He believed that the majority should rule, not by virtue of force, but right; and that by appealing to the reason of the voters, right would prevail. That by education, ignorance, the greatest foe of democracy, would be wiped out.

Believing this, Jefferson's statesmanship naturally included a comprehensive plan of education. District, grammar and classical schools, a free state college and a free state library were all included in his plan. After his retirement from politics he established the University of Virginia. It is noteworthy that he was the first American statesman to make education by the state a fundamental article of democratic faith.

In private life Jefferson was a true democrat. He despised pomp and disliked anything that distinguished him from the ordinary citizen. He was devoted to the arts of peace, fostered agriculture by precept and example, strove to make personal independence the highest virtue, abhorred slavery, wanted every man to have a chance to improve himself, tried to lighten public burdens and increase knowledge among the masses, and sought no glory for himself.

I have mentioned two great principles as representing the Spirit of Jefferson—democracy in government, and "World Peace" in all international affairs. Does America stand for these principles today? The United States entered the World war to make the world safe for democracy and to put an end to war as a means of settling international disputes. By that war thrones tottered and monarchs fell. As a result, democracy is more widespread today than ever before in the history of the world, and peace is no longer "the idle dream of an impractical idealist." Thus the Spirit of Jefferson lives not only in the hearts of his countrymen, but is spreading throughout the whole world.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A HIGH SCHOOL TRAINING

(Address given by William Jost at Jefferson Union high school graduation exercises.)

The wealthiest nation is not that which has the largest number of factories and fleets, but the largest number of happy and intelligent people. This statement was made by Thomas Jefferson, whose greatest aim was to have popular education and equal opportunities for everyone.

Intelligence is the making of most of your opportunities and adapting yourself to the situation. Therefore an intelligent person is one who makes the most of his opportunities here at school, so he will be able to make most of them when he is outside of school. We should try very hard to live up to the ideals of Thomas Jefferson.

In Jefferson Union high school every student receives equal opportunities, but they all do not receive the same value from a high school training, because they all do not take full advantage of their opportunities.

An intelligent person comes to school with a definite purpose—to make of himself a worth while citizen. Jefferson Union high school accomplishes this purpose, togther with the ideals of service, loyalty, honesty and responsibility.

We do not regard dishonesty only in connection with cheating in examinations, but in preparations of work, note books, which do not represent our efforts, reading which is done in a slip-shod manner and in appearance only, and essays which have received outside help. We realized that Jefferson Union high school placed its honor on the student who day by day worked in class room and laboratory. We also realized that if we are dishonorable we are not only cheating ourselves but also our parents, who are paying for waste time in school. Therefore we tried very hard to live up to the policy of honesty, and I know we have succeeded.

Jefferson Union high school has taught us to give service to others as well as to ourselves. It has also taught us to support our school activities. When there is a game you will find the majority of the students seated in the bleachers or on the baseline rooting for Jefferson until the final whistle or out, winning or losing. When there is a dance you will find every student doing his share by getting bids and making the dance a success. If the dramatics class is giving a play, every student does his share in seeing that there is a capacity crowd. If a school paper is being published, or an annual, each student helps the staff in every way and subscribes for it.

Jefferson Union high school has dedeveloped many go-getters. There are many students who do outside work on committees and staffs with an honest heart and willingness. Learning to do things right now, will help in doing larger tasks later on in life. By doing outside work it helps in sharing responsibilities. Sharing responsibilities now will prepare in sharing for later responsibilities in life.

Does education pay? This question can not be considered too carefully. Of course education pays, but many students do not realize it. A conversation similar to this is often heard among the students:

"Tom! Hey! Tom! Lend me your problems to copy. Quick! The bell will ring in ten minuts. I was out late last night and I didn't get 'em."

"Aw, why didn't you do your own work?" was the sagacious reply of the other student.

"I know," said the first student, "for two cents I'd give up the stuff; but I gotta have the credits or I won't graduate."

Students like this do not realize the full value of education. We come to school to prepare for a future vocation, but above all to develop the power of thought. The power of thought is the greatest faculty of man. It can not purchased by all the wealth in the world, but yet it is within the reach of everyone. This may be secured through education, together with initiative, perseverance, will power, idealism, and courage—the solid stepping stones across the quicksands of failure.

TWO EXTREMES CONNECTED

An important development has taken place in telephone communication in Great Britain through the opening of a telephone exchange at Land's End. As a result, Land's End, the furthermost point of England, is now connected by a trunk line with John o' Groats, the northernmost point of Scotland.

In the Almanac's annual list of accomplishments for 1928 the New York World may point with pride to its hard-won battle to fire Heywood Broun.

The greatest difficulty around a construction job is to find parking space for the laborers' cars.

CONSIDER DICARDING RELIC OF BARBARISM

The Department of Industrial Relations has called a conference of the oil companies of California to consider the desirability of introducing the six-day week in lieu of the seven-day week for all employees in the industry. It will be held in the State Building, Civic Center, San Francisco, on Monday morning, June 18, at 10 o'clock.

On January 1, 1927, the Standard Oil Company adopted the six-day week for all of its employees, with the exception of its drilling crews. Beginning with April 15, this company extended the six-day week to the drilling crews. This change was made without reduction in pay.

It is believed that other oil companies have been considering action similar to that taken by the Standard Oil Company. A general discussion will be helpful in obtaining uniform conditions for the approximately ten thousand employees concerned.

The California legislature approved on February 27, 1893, "An act to provide for a day of rest from labor." Leaving the law out of consideration, there is the highest sanction known to man for the weekly day of rest. Public opinion supports the twenty-four hours cessation from toil each week. Employers are generally committed to the wisdom of the policy. Hence this invitation to attend the conference in San Francisco on June 18 is sent in the spirit of the larger view of the social and economic values involved.

There is a daily average of more than 862,000 local telephone calls in the city of Pittsburgh, and of 28,000 calls per day to out-of-town points.

A reasonable wish is more likely to come true.

THE RETURN of ANTHONY TRENT

By WYNDHAM MARTYN

Copyright by Barse & Hopkins WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

Anthony Trent returns to New York after nearly four years' absence. Once known as the master criminal, Trent is going straight. The purser accuses Trent of jumping overboard from the Poitiania at Liverpool, but is disappointed when Trent shows no surprise. He learns his friend, Capt. Frank Sutton, is in Sing Sing. At New York Trent is startled to find somebody occupying his house. The stranger is Sutton Campbell, the brother of his best friend, who is serving ten years in prison. Trent is asked by Campbell Sutton to force Payson Grant to a written confession, having crookedly obtained all of Captain Sutton's possessions and later married his wife. Trent, after long hesitation, consents. Trent starts on a campaign to accomplish the downfall of Payson Grant. He learns from an old friend, Clarke, that Captain Sutton has escaped from Sing Sing, and also learns that Captain Sutton has no brother. Coming home one evening threatening to expose Campbell Sutton, Trent finds, to his great surprise, that Campbell is the escaped Captain Sutton.

Neither of them knew that Sutton's large mining interests in South America were in a parlous state from the beginning of the World war in 1914. Sutton carried his burdens alone. And when he knew he was to go overseas and had those premonitions of death which are as often wrong as right, he made over nearly all of his fortune to his wife. And to Payson Grant he gave larger control of the office. There was an old and trusted bookkeeper who was left to watch. This aged and deserving keeper of accounts was dismissed by Payson Grant while Sutton was still on the troop ship, eastward bound. His protests were ineffectual. The old watch dogs who had the traditions of an honorable firm in their blood followed the head bookkeeper.

It was fortunate for Grant that a loaded revolver was found in Sutton's pocket when he was dragged from belaboring the man who had wronged him. It was, to begin with, an infraction of the Sullivan act and as such punishable with seven years' imprisonment as a maximum. And every minute of the trial swelled Grant's ultimate triumph. It had been easy to buy false testimony from a former maid as to cruelty. And Sutton insulted the judge and turned the jurors against him. It seemed that fate, after smiling on Sutton's career and bringing him fortune and honor, was now bent on his utter destruction.

Considering Sutton's long absence abroad, and the martyred years his wife had spent, the divorce and marriage to Payson Grant seemed to the sympathetic world neither hurried nor unjustified. And, since Payson Grant had plenty of money to indulge his tastes, and had not yet met a woman he liked more than Natica, happiness seemed in a fair way to be a settled state.

Then Frank Sutton escaped from Sing Sing and, notwithstanding the precautions Grant had surrounded himself with, he was uneasy.

"Nat," he said, coming up to the room where she was breakfasting in bed, "Frank has got out of Sing Sing!"

Her alarm was not so noticeable as his.

"They always capture them," she observed. That he was troubled did not escape her. She knew he was physically afraid of her ex-husband. But the modern society woman is not to be won by the hard-hitting male as are the women of other spheres. She thought fighting was a stupid, archaic practice and counseled Payson to get a permit to carry a revolver.

"You think he'll come here?" she demanded. A vulgar brawl which might be seized upon by the Saffron Press distressed her immeasurably. Why couldn't Frank stay in prison, she wondered. He had been tried and convicted. She felt she would always detest her former husband for the notoriety he had brought her. It was quite easy for her to forget that she was the cause. All emotions of a violent nature were wrinkle-producing, she believed.

"He's after me," Payson said gloomily. "And he may get me."

"Not if you're careful," she said. "Frank was always a most obvious person without subtleties or nuances of any kind. The sort of man who remains a grownup boy is fatiguing. He is just as likely to ring the front door bell and ask you to step into the hall and be killed."

Payson Grant frowned. This was callousness he did not suspect.

"D—n it, Nat," he expostulated, "you might be serious. I tell you Frank is a whole lot deeper than you ever suspected."

"Dear boy," Natica pleaded, "you are trifling with my digestion. I've a most important luncheon party and I want to feel at my best. Don't worry about it. I'm not."

"You take it altogether too lightly," he said, frowning. He started as he heard a knock on the door.

"It's probably Mademoiselle Dupin," Natica told him. "I take an hour's conversational French now."

A quietly dressed woman entered. He hardly glanced at her. It was the lady of distinguished French family who was to enable his wife to converse in polite and idiomatic French. She had set her mind on a chateau near Paris next year and the capture of the old noblesse.

Although Natica Grant allowed her husband to think she was not concerned about Sutton's escape, it, in truth, bothered her more than she admitted. When he had been sentenced and public interest had centered upon other matters of the moment, she supposed the scandal would soon be forgotten. And now there was to be more of it. It might conceivably injure her in her campaign against the noblesse who were destined to be her neighbors. Mademoiselle Dupin was coaching her in the foibles of the people she desired to conquer.

Since two weeks had gone by without the apprehension of Frank Sutton and the police confessed themselves without clews of value, Mrs. Grant hoped he had escaped. He had spent some of his early years in South America at his father's mining property, and knew a little Spanish. Frank was one of those strong men who could readily do laboring work. Payson was different; she could not imagine her present husband in overalls.

Payson, for all his air of carelessness about the result, was in secret eaten by dire fears. He added two airedales of blood to his establishment. He bought them because they were one-man dogs, he had heard, and turned them loose at night in the grounds. He was their first victim. The fact that he had paid for them was, perhaps, not sufficiently impressed on the canine intelligence, for they treed him as he crossed from the house to the garage to tell Regan, his head chauffeur, that a police officer had warned him of a pilfering tramp in the neighborhood.

Natica was shown this new and nervous mood when he threatened to assault a small, defenseless man who had called to inquire if the new porch was satisfactory.

"You are drinking too many cocktails between meals," she said.

"It may be I am," he returned, "I feel shot to bits, and that's a fact, Nat. H—l!" he exploded, speaking truth for the moment, "Frank got a rotten deal all round, and some one's got to suffer."

"A judge sentenced him. I didn't," she said coldly. She had convinced herself that Sutton merited punishment, and Payson's imputation seemed both annoying and false.

Grant had not been so anxious to leave his own country for the untried delights of the French chateau as Natica. But he found a new pleasure in the idea now. He could be more inviolate in the Chateau St. Remy-les-Chevreuse than in Deal Beach. It had its consolations, being only an hour's motor trip from Paris. He told his wife he was ready to go whenever she pleased.

"We shall stop here for the summer," she said. "We've invited too many people to run away like that. Also, I've sworn lex accent shall be perfect before I go."

* * * * * * *

Never during the long hours in which Frank Sutton spoke of the wrongs he had endured at the hands of Payson Grant did he use the threats which Campbell Sutton had swung over the head of Anthony Trent like a club. In one mood of despondency he advised Trent to give up an idea born of hate that the atmosphere of prison nurtures. But he had reckoned without his friend's loyalty.

The spectacle of Frank Sutton brought to the dust, his name dishonored, the woman he loved married to the man who had doubly betrayed him, was not of a nature to lessen Trent's determination to inflict punishment. And it was not to be an act solely of vengeance. He resolved to vindicate Sutton's name. He was not sure how this would affect the convict's status legally; but there would be money enough to retain the best of counsel, and in the end no doubt a pardon could be won.

"I shall seek quarters in a more fashionable locality," he told Sutton. "While I want nothing better than this, it is not from Central Park, West, that those who storm society proceed."

At a house agent's whose clientele was a distinguished one Trent learned of several furnished apartments for subtenancy along the Avenue. He was looking at one in the rear of the house in the Fifties.

"I'd like one facing the Avenue," he remarked. "Is the one in front occupied?"

"That belongs to young Stratford Van Boden," the agent said. "I let it to him, but he's abroad now."

Trent knew a good bit about this youngest disappointment of one of America's most celebrated families. He had likeable qualities, but little moral stamina. And of course his enormous fortune had attracted to him the least worthy if most fascinating of the demi-monde.

"Would he sublet?"

The house agent was doubtful. He considered it unlikely because the monetary need did not exist.

"He is always hard up," Trent remarked. "I'll send a cable."

It was a costly cable and the answer prepaid. Stratford remembered Anthony Trent well and was pinched for ready money. The terms were generous ones and acceptable.

Within a week of meeting Frank Sutton, Trent was established in the most luxurious apartments he had ever seen; the home of one whose place in society was unquestioned.

It was Trent's first step. He had paid attention to his base as military tactics had instilled in him the advisability of doing. The advance was his next problem. He found in Van Boden's rooms the members' lists of all the exclusive clubs a Van Boden need belong to. They were clubs to which Trent could not hope to enter other than as a guest. He was not deceived as to this.

He glanced down the columns with interest. Presently he found the name he was searching for. It was in the most exclusive young man's club New York possesses.

Anthony Trent remembered very well his first meeting with Swithin Weld. He had gone into the supersmart Bachelors' club in Hamilton place, Park lane, with his friend, Arthur Grenvil. At dinner he was among a group of men of rank and fashion. And, since so many foreigners imagine all Americans of a type fit to be guests at such a club as the Bachelors' must be glad to meet one another, Swithin Weld was introduced to his fellow countryman by a marquis who thought they would fall into one another's arms.

Swithin Weld had never heard of Trent, and said so. He remarked it in a tone that was not conciliatory. He thought he knew every eligible American. Those he did not know were not eligible socially. Weld supposed that this Anthony Trent was one of those Americans, to be met with all over Europe, who have a genius for understanding alien people, are welcome visitors in great houses, and visit their own country but rarely.

One night, after a successful day at Sandown, Weld had gone to one of the most notorious supper clubs in London. There he had taken too much champagne for one of his temperate habits, and had been inveigled into a secluded cardroom where three experts had taken what he had won at the races, and left him heavily in debt. It was while the winners were waiting for the check which he hesitated to draw because he had not sufficient balance at the bank to mee, it, that Trent came along. Trent knew the men with whom Weld was playing to be notoriously crooked. Apparently the gamblers would not accept I. O. U's. To obtain a check drawn when funds were not in the bank to meet it was a serious offense in London, and would enable them to make the Weld family pay through the nose for its return. The sum was two thousand pounds.

Trent strolled over and spoke amicably to his fellow countryman, ignoring the sharpers entirely.

Marvelous How Birds Wing Back to Home

Bird lovers have believed for centuries that migratory birds return to the same home, year after year. Modern science has proved this belief to be right. Birds are caught in traps that do not hurt them, marked with tiny leg bands of aluminum, each bearing a number, and released. Next year, the same birds are caught again in the same locality, often when occupying the same nest.

Evidently, a bird's memory for direction and location must be quite as marvelous as the older writers believed. The catbird winters as far south as Panama, yet catbirds marked in northern Ohio came back to the same neighborhood, year after year. Sometimes they move a few rods or furlongs, but the frequency with which they return to the very spot is astounding.

Cats find their way back to the old home across a township, horses across a county or two, and dogs have been known to pass through several states in returning to a beloved master, but birds find their way across a continent, and sometimes over a sea as well.

The Down and Outer

A man may be down, but he isn't out unless he had rather talk about his ill fortune than his prospects.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Fine Chance for Him to Try Out "Nesting"

In the general office of one of the public utilities there is a young woman, well past sixteen, unmarried, who takes a motherly interest in all her fellow employees and never misses an opportunity to "horn in," in a pleasing way, in their personal affairs. This habit has become so fixed that some of the young women take it as a source of annoyance and consequently enjoy putting one over on her. However, recently she succeeded in turning that trick herself. One of the complaint men was passing through the office and in her high shrill voice, that carried throughout the room, she called: "Oh, Mr. —, come over here, you are just the man I want." Her face turned crimson as she heard giggles from all parts of the room. Mr.— also suffered his moment of torture as he stood in the midst of a group of giggling women. Turning to the office manager, he said: "I wish you would quiet that bunch of giggling hens," to which the manager responded, "Why not try putting them on the nest yourself?"—Indianapolis News.

Capital's "Inner Shrine"

There is a set in Washington more exclusive even than the circle which numbers foreign diplomats, wealthy winter residents, federal officials and their families. The capital's real "inner shrine" is composed of the few people who can truthfully call themselves natives of Washington. They are members of families which have made the capital their home for generations. Jewels and fashionable dress are confined to social functions of the other group; the native Washingtonians are content to keep on living in old houses that seem quaint beside the palace-like abodes of "society" so called. Old Washingtonians delight to give the cold shoulder to office holders and the new rich. Some of the oldest inhabitants continue to drive about the street in carriages which served their forbears.

Fawn's Foster Mother

Mrs. E. Cooper, who lives on a homestead bordering the Glacier National park game preserve, is visited every morning by a fawn that leaves its mother in the forest, to nurse the cow while Mrs. Cooper is milking. The mother deer patiently waits for the fawn at a safe distance and appears to be contented to allow this relay relief furnished by the cow. The cow offers no objection and Mrs. Cooper generously "spares the milk" because she likes to pet the fawn.

His Stand

"This 'ere permiscuss parking of cars anywhere and everywhere has got to stop!" sternly said Constable Slackputter of Petunia.

"There is only one car in sight besides mine," returned the offending motorist. "You wouldn't call two cars in a block 'promiscuous,' would you?"

"I wouldn't, har? By gosh—when I say a thing is permiscuss it's permiscuss, whether it is or not!"—Kansas City Times.

Human Worker Forgotten

DEFECTIVE CHILDREN

According to a report compiled from a survey of ten million American school children, it appars that about 75 per cent have more or less serious physical defects.

The greater number have defective teeth, this condition being found in more than 60 per cent of all those examined. Nearly 25 per cent have defective eyesight.

From 10 to 20 per cent are affected with fallen arches, a smaller number from deafness, heart trouble and tuberculosis, while nearly 15 per cent are undernourished.

Measures for the correction of these defects are being taken in an increasing number of states and local communities, but a tremendous amount of work and education is still necessary in order to bring parents to realize the necessity for giving such matters serious attention.

Children have a right to a fair chance in the world, which is impossible under the handicap of a poor physical condition to begin with. Every parent should take this fact to heart and do their utmost to promote the health of their offspring.

A normal, healthy child has a fair chance at success in life, if given proper education. The physically defective child begins with a handicap that in many instances can not be overcome.

JOKE ON A QUEEN

Not everyone might dare to play a joke on a queen, but Professor Charles Lutwidge Dodgson of England did, the victim of his jest being none other than the late Queen Victoria. The learned professor was one of the ablest mathematicians of his day and the author of numerous text books, besides being the writer of fascinating stories, of which "Alice in Wonderland" is the most famous.

It is related that Queen Victoria was greatly pleased with "Alice," and on a personal meeting with the professor she complimented him highly and asked him to send her copies of all his books.

Complying with her request he sent her his "Formulae of Plane Trigonometry" and several other volumes representing his mathematical labors. Whether the good queen enjoyed these as much as she did "Alice in Wonderland" is not recorded.

Professor Dodgson was one of many scientific men who have from time to time devoted attention to fictional literature, and while his professional attainments were known only within a limited circle, his charming stories, written under the pen name of Lewis Carroll, gave him world-wide fame.

A Maine woman, 106 years old, attributes her long life to the fact that she has always minded her own business. Reformers will say she has paid a terrible price.

ARE WE WORSE OR BETTER?

Recently a pastor began his sermon with a statement which sounds quite familiar. He said:

"There is lawlessness everywhere. Children no longer obey their parents. It is evident that the ends of things is at hand."

Then the preacher told the congregation that the words were not original with him, nor even an utterance of the present day, but that they had been translated from an inscription found among the ruins in ancient Assyria, dating centuries before the time of the patriarch Abraham.

Throughout all recorded history are evidences that such pessimism has existed from time to time as to the future of the race. Now and then an era of comparative peace and quiet has been experienced, only to be followed by recurring outbreaks of violence and lawlessness.

While present day conditions are bad enough, it is quite evident to the discerning that they are better than those of the past. There is more thought given to the relief of suffering, to the betterment of industrial conditions, to the protection of the helpless, and to other humanitarian enterprises than ever before.

Although the World war gave civilization a severe test, recovery has been rapid and the ground lost is being speedily regained. It must be remembered that war has marked the history of every generation of mankind, and the same is true of lawlessness, oppression and every other manifestation of human imperfection.

It is reasonable to believe that these will always exist in greater or less degree, so long as good and evil struggle for mastery in the hearts and minds of men.

Undoubtedly we are getting no worse, and in fact we belive the world is growing better every day.

STRAY CATS AND DOGS

The zeal of those who stress the importance of kindness to animals may sometimes appear to be a manifestation of sentimentality, yet there is generally behind it a sincere and laudable impulse.

While it may be argued that the sympathy and effort expended on the unfortunate animals might better be exerted in behalf of human beings, the fact is that those who treat horses, cats and dogs with humane consideration are more likely to exhibit a similar attitude toward their fellow men.

A New York organization reports that during the past year it has found homes for 667 homeless dogs and 549 stray cats, while sixty-eight dogs and ten cats were returned to their owners through identifying tags or collars. Bronze medals were presented to two men who saved a dog at considerable risk to themselves.

An important work of such organizations is the humane education of children, many if not most of whom have an apparent natural tendency to make life miserable for helpless animals, particularly those not their own. In some cases the mistreatment of animals is merely the result of thoughtlessness, and many be checked by kindly admonition; in others there appears to be a tendency toward wanton cruelty, which sterner measures are necessary to repress.

The teaching of kindness to animals should have a place in the training of every child, and it can be taught better by personal example than in any other way. To befriend a stray cat or dog is to teach a lesson of humaneness to all who observe the act. And such lessons are worth while.

HOLIDAYS NECESSARY

Dr. Charles H. Mayo, the noted Minnesota surgeon, declares that holidays are necessary to the prologation of life and the attainment of the highest achievements.

He especially commends the habit of English clerks and workmen, who usually spend their week ends in the country or at the seashore, where they enjoy surroundings entirely different from those in which their daily tasks are pursued. This change of activity and scenery is the best possible recreation to prevent becoming fagged out from one's work, says Dr. Mayo.

There is no doubt that most persons fail to take advantage of their opportunities to get away from and forget for a time their regular occupations. The hustle and bustle of American town and city life are trying on both body and mind.

Perhaps we could do more and better work if we would make it a practice to spend our holidays, week ends and vacations as far away from shop and office as possible.

Where are you going to spend your vacation?

SOME PURITAN CUT-UPS

Those who depend on the regular historical works of the school book type no doubt have formed the idea that the Puritan forefathers (and foremothers) of New England were about as perfect as folks could be.

The iconoclasts have been at work again, however, and have dug up some old records which appear to show that human nature was about the same in the old days as it is at present. A recent writer quotes at length from a Massachusetts court docket of 1646, of which a few sample cases are given as follows:

Henry Walton fined for saying he would as leave hear a dog bark as to hear Reverend Cobbell preach.

John Studley fined for stealing his master's ox and selling it to him.

Thomas Gray of Marblehead whipped for being overseen in drink.

Philip Crumwell fined for not living with his wife.

Charles Philips fined for being in drink three times in two days.

Mrs. Griffith fined for swearing.

Johnson Wright, of Missouri, bequeathed 120 acres of land to the Almighty, who was designated in the deed as the "party of the second part."

Some of our friends are such good fellows that we can almost forgive them for having such fool notions about religion and politics.

Praising the town ladies for having the cemetery cleaned up, an exchange declares that "the grave-yard looks most inviting."

A loaf of bread 60 feet long was baked in Minneapolis. In such a case half a loaf would be 30 feet better than none.

DUILIO TOSI PASSES AWAY

It was with much sorrow that the many friends of Duilio Tosi learned of his sudden death at his home in San Francisco last Sunday. Mr. Tosi and family formerly lived in Colma for many years, he being engaged in the monumental business in Lawndale. He was a member of the firm of Weisenburg & D. Tossi, at the time of his death. Mr. Tosi was the beloved husband of Amelia Tosi and father of Sergio J., Alessandro, Mario and Vincent Tosi and Mrs. Bernard McGowan and Mrs. Ralph Smith. He was a native of Italy. The funeral was held last Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock under the auspices of Richmond Lodge No. 375, F. & A. M. Interment was at the Cypress Lawn Memorial Park.

GIRLS' CLUB OF COLMA

On Thursday avening of last week the Girls' Club of Colma were royally entertained at the home of Mrs. H. W. Brown, on Dunk street, with a delicious supper in honor of their closing for the season. The club will be closed during the summer months of June, July and August.

The spacious dining room was artistically decorated for the occasion and a huge basket of varigated flowers occupied the center of the table, which was also beautifully decorated.

After the dinner the business meeting was held, being called to order by the President, Miss Fabian Ver Linden. Miss Elsie Wilke, acting as secretary for the evening, read the minutes of the previous meeting, and after routine business was disposed of, nomination and election of officers was held, which proved to be the main event of the program, the following officers being chosen: President, Mrs. Pauline Shinazy; Vice-president, Miss Alice Thiel; Secretary, Miss Elsie Wilke; Treasurer, Miss Bertha Thiel.

Miss Fabian Ver Linden, active member of the Girls' Club, who for many years past acted as secretary and during the term of 1927-1928 was the efficent president, was paid many compliments for her deeds of hard work which have helped in the making of a very successful term. Miss Ver Linden was elected chairman of the program committee, whose duty it will be to give a helping hand to all officers and to the directors, Mrs. W. H. Brown and Mrs. A. M. Sheldon.

Many plans are being made for the future. In August the program committee will meet in Berkeley, where they will spend the day at the University of California, visiting many places of interest.

RABIES SPREAD REPORTED IN PARTS OF WESTERN SLOPE

The latest weekly bulletin of the department of public health for California reports an increase in rabies throughout the United States and a prevalence in California not equalled during the past few years.

The disease, the bulletin states, had been confined to the southern part of the state until last November, when it extended to the northern section, Marin county being especially affected.

During the week ending May 12, a total of fifty-one cases were discovered within the state. These rabid animals were found in Marin, Riverside, San Bernardino, Stanislaus and Los Angeles counties. There have been no human deaths from rabies since last year, when one death occurred.

Rabies, the report states, is spread chiefly by stray dogs. Regarding symptoms, the report points out, there are many erroneous ideas concerning this disease. The dog suffering from this malady does not always foam at the mouth. Restlessness, change of disposition and change in the voice, it states, are the usual symptoms.

Rabies, contrary to the general opinion, is more common in the winter than in the summer. It is generally less prevalent in the so-called "dog" days of August.

Powley in Charge of Operations of Pacific Telephone & Telegraph

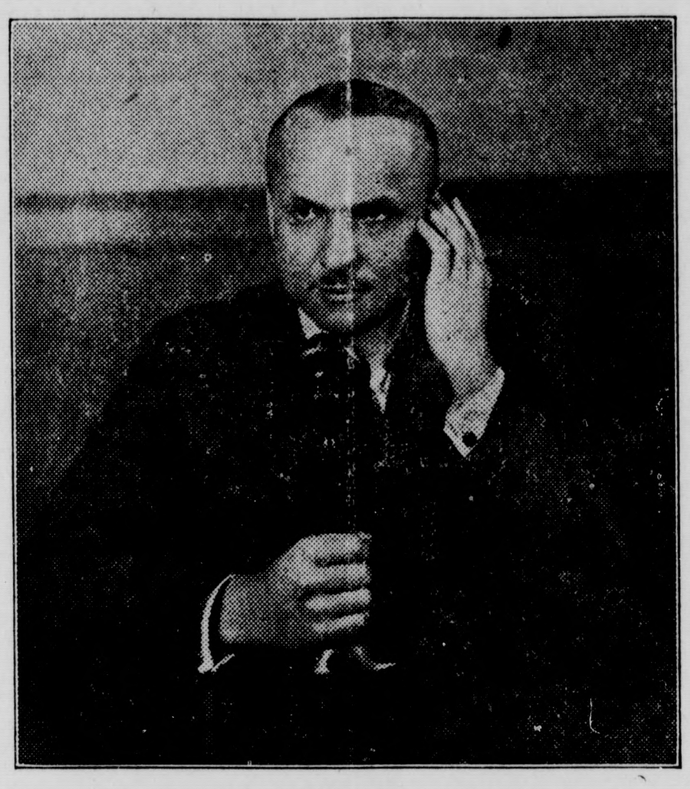
N. R. Powley is "home." A former San Franciscan with a record for constructive achievement in Coast telephone matters, he has returned to this part of the state with new and enlarged responsibilities—those of vice-president in charge of operations of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. He will be in charge of operations of all the Bell companies of the Pacific Coast and bordering states, serving directly under President H. D. Pillsbury at San Francisco.

Mr. Powley brings to this new post a keen appreciation of the telephone needs of Central and Northern California. He was with the Bay division from 1912 until 1919. During the nine years of absence he has risen through the positions of commercial superintendent, division superintendent and general manager in other districts. A close knowledge of the telephone business and a close sympathy, also, for the public's viewpoint are brought to his new, responsible post.

When asked what his policy would be in the operation of the Pacific system, Mr. Powley said: "Fair play first, last and all the time, and the finest quality of telephone service it is in us to provide. There is only one policy in the Bell system, and that is the one which has been given nation-wide expression by its chief executive, Walter S. Gifford."

Mr. Powley pointed out the salient points of that policy, stating that there are today over 420,000 stockholders of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and no one of them owns so much as one per cent of the capital stock.

"The fact that the ownership is so widespread and diffused imposes an unusual obligation on the management to see to it that the savings of these hundreds of thousands of people are secure and remain so," said Mr. Powley. "Our policy and purpose is to give the most telephone service and the best, at the least cost to the public."



SIDELIGHTS

The inalienable right of young people to make love has been upheld in the highest Berlin court. George Mueller and Anna Droglich were under contract with an employer who discharged them because he contended that their love affair interfered with his business. Now he must pay them $700, with which they will start housekeeping.

Dr. Gruez, of Vienna, declares that few women have legs which are mates, and that in most cases the difference between the two limbs are very marked. It is aassumed that the doctor has enjoyed the interesting studies which led him to this conclusion.

Another unusual tale of a cat that came back is reported from Chicago. Mrs. Charles S. Skelton gave her pet cat to a niece living 100 miles away and went to Europe. The cat remained with the niece but one day, and six months later reappeared at its Chicago home half starved and badly lacerated.

James Rooney of Newark, who can not read, argued with a traffic cop who stopped him for having no license plate. He showed the policeman a document which he said entitled him to drive his car. It was marked "back seat driver's license," and Rooney said he had bought it from three strangers for $3.

Film actresses employed by certain London producers have about as much liberty as a caged canary. Their contracts provide that they must agree to obey all proper orders, suffer fines for unpunctuality, and must not marry without the company's permission.

Gene Tunney, who lately discussed Shakespeare at Yale, is not the only pugilist with scholastic attainments. Jack Hood, a British welterweight champion, recently preached a sermon from the pulpit of St. John's church in Birmingham, England.

How easy it is to be mistaken is shown in a recent case in Turin, Italy. Two days after twenty-one men and women had "identified" Signora Betina Talghi as the kidnaper of two children, the real criminal was caught in Naples with the youngsters in charge. The two women bore little resemblance to each other.

Rudolph Friml, writer of operas, doesn't believe in allowing a little thing like a divorce to interfere with friendship. He will take his third wife to Paris, accompanied by his second, to stage a big family party with wife number one.

The dead body of a man found shot in a Chicago alley was identified as that of Arthur McCaffray by his own father and sent to an undertaking establishment. While preparations for the funeral were in progress, McCaffray appeared, explaining that he had been attending a sick friend. The coroner changed the name of the dead man on his records to read "John Doe."

The Richmond Christian Advocate recently waxed indignant in an editorial because the newspapers ignored the feat of a Chinese girl, reported to have made a non-stop flight from Macon, Georgia, to Shanghai. The item was published in only one newspaper, the Jester edition of the Macon Telegraph, edited by Wesleyan students. It was a joke, but the Advocate swallowed the yarn, hence its anger.

Mrs. Mary Hearn, of Liverpool, self-styled "white wich," proposed to remove an "evil eye" curse from one Richard Parry, aged 75, who was suffering from a peculiar illness. Parry paid $2,500 for the magical treatment but remained sick. Now Mrs. Hearn will practice her art in jail, if at all, for the next six months.

Clara Bow, famed red-head of the movies, was injured slightly by a bullet which struck her leg after glancing from its target during the filming of a scene. Which is not very serious, but reminds us that Bow-legs are not objectionable if they happen to be Clara's.

More twins are being born than formerly and biologists are seeking to discover the reason. Prospective parents are also interested to know.

Gruesome story from a Barstow, Cal., newspaper: "Bill Jarret has returned from working on the graveyard shift of the Corpse Mining Company in Coffin canyon, located in Dead Man's canyon in Funeral range at the edge of Death Valley. He leaves next week for a prospecting trip to the Devil's Playground in Hell's Half Acre."

SMALL TOWN INDUSTRY

From unmistakable trends now observable, it appears that the smaller cities and towns of the country are rapidly coming into their own in an industrial way. Many industrial plants are seeking locations, not in the congested centers of population, but in smaller communities advantageously located with respect to raw materials, transportation, electric power and dependable labor supply.

One of the most striking examples of this movement is noted in the recent announcement that 100,000 new cotton spindles will be installed by a single manufacturing corporation in Alabama this summer. Instead of placing all of these spindles in one locality, they will be distributed among ten small towns, ten thousand spindles going to each.

This is only one of many similar movements of industrial establishments toward the smaller communities, but it is the largest single movement of its kind so far announced. It should give encouragement to any town, regardless of its size, where favorable conditions exist for carrying on a manufacturing enterprise.

An industrial payroll is a valuable asset in supplementing the resources of agricultural sections by giving employment to surplus labor, creating a better market for products of the farm, and otherwise stimulating growth and progress. Every community should make the most of its opportunities for securing such payrolls.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

American Legion posts in California a few days ago were notified by State Adjutant James K. Fisk that an extension of time has been granted for the filing of the "bonus." Time for making applications under the adjusted compensation act has been extended to January 2, 1930.

Presentation of California tax information to the State Tax Commission, which now is studying revision of the revenue raising system, has been started by Professor Robert M. Haig, professor of economics at Columbia University, the commission's expert. Haig, however, still is gathering data, and the work of the commission will not be started for some time.

Paving the way for a legal fight, the state departments of finance and public works a few days ago announced refusal to pay the $328,000 claim of F. Rolandi, San Francisco contractor and builder of the Klamath river highway bridge in Del Norte county, which the state has never accepted. Rolandi has already been paid $317,000 for the bridge, defects in which, public works officials declared, have occasioned repair expenditures of $69,000 in state funds.

Historic Coloma, scene of gold discovery in California, witnessed its first church wedding last week since the poet, Edwin Markham, author of "The Man With the Hoe," married Annie Cox there in August, 185. The ceremony united Miss Hilda Herzig of Lotus, Eldorado county, and Ben Ruedge of Lodi. The Rev. C. W. Null of Placerville read the marriage service in a Coloma church erected in 1854, the first Episcopal church in Northern California save one at San Francisco.

Burning of grass along the highways of California is being resorted to extensively by the state highway and forestry departments to reduce the number and destructiveness of brush and grass fires, which at this early date already number more than 140. By burning the grass forestry officials point out there will be less danger of cigarettes, cigars and matches carelessly thrown from automobiles causing fires.

William Edward Hickman, under sentence of death for the murder of little Marian Parker of Los Angeles, will know within ninety days whether or not he is to hang. Final briefs in his appeal from the conviction were filed last week with the State Supreme Court, and under the law the court has ninety days to render its decision. The appeal is on a point of questioning the insanity law provision under which Hickman was convicted and sentenced.

A $10,000,000 bridge is to replace the famed Southern Pacific train-ferry between Benicia and Port Costa. Work on the bridge, which is to extend from Suisun Point on the south side of Carquinez Strait and east of Martinez to Army Point on the north short of the strait east of Benicia, will start within a few months. The new bridge will be a double track structure more than a mile long. The main span will have a clearance of 135 feet, sufficient to allow deep sea vessels to pass under it in safety. Construction of the bridge will mean changed schedules for the San Francisco Overland Limited, Shasta Limited and other trains of the company.

Nearly $1,500,000 in state highway bids will be advertised by the division of highways this week. This was announced by Bert B. Meek, state director of public works. The largest of the projects is the grading and surfacing, with California-type pavement, of five miles of the Bay Shore Highway between San Francisco and South San Francisco. The budget allots $600,000 for this work. Bids also will be advertised for paving approximately twelve miles of the Oxnard-San Juan Capistrano Highway between Oxnard and Santa Monica. This road was one of the projects included in the $40,000,000 bond issue authorized 1919. The cost of the work is estimated at more than $500,000.

Many an angler has sought his favorite fishing pool this year and sought in vain. The reason for this is that a great number of the heavily fished streams were closed by executive order of Governor C. C. Young and Fred G. Stevenot, director of natural resources, to all angling when the trout season opened May 1. Two classes of streams and tributaries are closed under the law which was adopted at the 1927 session of the California Legislature: First, those closed arbitarily because of the necessity of protecting the streams for egg-taking purposes by the division of fish and game, and second, streams recommended either by sportsmen's organizations or by petitions filed with the fish and game division by interested groups of citizens.

Establishment of border patrol stations on the main highways leading out of Northern California as a means of checking crime in the state is being considered by Frank G. Snook, chief of the motor vehicle department, on the showing of stations operated in the south. The southern stations are at Blythe, Daggett and Yuma. Reports received by Snook show many auto thieves are abandoning cars before they reach the stations rather than attempt to pass the police stationed there, who hold descriptions of stolen cars and hunted criminals.

Why does the road wind ever away
Till we cannot see the end?
Why do we climb and climb each day—
Where does it lead, good friend?
Where can it lead but up and away?
Why need we see the end
If we work and sing and climb each day
And live and love, good friend?

SALADS IN VARIETY

The foundation of almost all salads is good lettuce. It should be washed and wrapped in a cloth, then placed in the ice chest to chill. Plates on which the salad is to be served should be chilled, then when the salad proper is placed on the lettuce it will be especially appetizing.

Potato Salad.—Use small new potatoes; wash and boil in salted water with the skins on. Remove the skins, dice when cold. To each pint of potatoes add one-fourth teaspoonful of chopped chives or grated onion, one large or three small pickled beets diced, three sardines separated into small pieces, with the skin and bones removed; three hard-cooked eggs cut into slices and enough mayonnaise dressing to moisten, about a cupful. Chill and serve on lettuce.

Hartley Salad.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-fourth cupful of cold water for five minutes. Peel and dice one cucumber. Drain a quart can of pineapple and cut the slices into dice. Heat the pineapple juice to the boiling point and pour it over the gelatin, stir until it is well dissolved, adding enough water to make three cupfuls. Mix with one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of lemon juice, the diced cucumber and one-half cupful of pecan meats. Place in molds in the refrigerator and let stand overnight. Serve unmolded on lettuce.

Sweetbread and Mushroom Salad.—Soak one medium sized pair of sweetbreads in cold salted water for fifteen minutes. Boil in slightly acidulated water until firm. Remove and chill; remove the membranes and break into pieces. Prepare three-fourths of a pound of fresh mushrooms, simmer in salted water for five minutes, drain and arrange on lettuce when cool. Add mayonnaise to the sweetbreads and place all on lettuce. Garnish with strips of pimento.

Chicken Chowder.—Try out two slices of fat salt pork and cook with two sliced onions five minutes in the fat and scraps. Add six medium-sized potatoes cut into dice, dredge with salt and pepper and cover with water or chicken broth, simmer until the potatoes are tender, then add two cupfuls of coarsely diced cooked fowl, one cupful of cooked celery and one quart of milk. When boiling thicken slightly with chicken fat and flour well blended, add some thick cream and serve.

Vegetable Ways.

Nowadays we are urged to cut down on proteins and eat more of the succulent vegetables as well as those of woody fiber. The latter are needed in our diet to add roughage. Here are a few suggestions:

Spanish Onions, Stuffed.—Select large even-sized onions, one for each serving. Use a grapefruit knife to scoop out much of the center of each, leaving a shell to hold the filling. Cook the centers and the shell until tender. Chop the center portions very fine and saute in butter until a light brown. Add to the chopped portion one-fourth cupful of coarsely chopped walnut meats, one-half cupful of bread crumbs, one teaspoonful of salt, one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper and six teaspoonfuls of grated cheese. Fill the onion shells with this mixture, arrange in a baking dish, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and cheese and bake until brown. Dust generously with paprika and serve.

Lima Beans With Prunes.—Soak one cupful of lima beans overnight and in the morning parboil them until their skins break. Soak one-half pound of prunes in water to cover, overnight, pit and cut into halves. Pare six potatoes and cut into lengthwise slices. Select a two-pound neck-piece of beef, sear it in three tablespoonfuls of fat, put into a deep scotch kettle, with the beans, prunes and potatoes. Add a tablespoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of chili powder, one-fourth cupful of molasses and three cupfuls of water, using all the prune water that they were soaked in. Cover and cook in the oven three hours.

Salad Surprise.—Select small, deeply colored canned pimentoes, drain and rinse the cups well in cold water, then let them marinate in french dressing for an hour. Meanwhile cut a slice of canned pineapple into small shreds, shred two or three stalks of celery and one-fourth cupful of almonds, mix and add one-half cupful of seeded green grapes cut into quarters. Moisten with french dressing and fill the cups. Set them into gem pans to fill. Serve on lettuce and garnish each with a sprig of mint or water cress.

BREADON DECRIES PLAYER-MANAGER

Playing and Directing Too Big Strain for Any Man.

"I am convinced that no ball player, however great he may be as a player, or however great may be his possibilities as a manager, can manage a major league ball club and play his position at the same time."

It was Sam Breadon, owner of the St. Louis Cardinals, talking, says the New York World.

He offers as first-hand examples Rogers Hornsby and Bob O'Farrell, the two men who preceded Bill McKechnie, this year's pilot, as manager of the St. Louis entry in the National league race.

"Rogers Hornsby," says Breadon "was recognized as the greatest batter in the National league and one of the greatest the game has produced when I made him manager of the Cardinals.

"He had a lifetime batting average close to .400.

"He is of the positive, self-willed type that should be able to throw off the mental strain that goes with directing the destinies of a big league club. Yet he wound up his only season as a manager of the team with a batting average of .317. He was 'way off his usual form.

"Bob O'Farrell succeeded him—one of the greatest catchers in the game. O'Farrell's work as a catcher suffered mainly because of the strain of directing the play of the team.

"Selecting and developing the players and molding them into a team and directing the play of that team on the field is one man's task in itself. Playing any position on a major league ball club demands a man's best, mentally and physically.

"A manager cannot make the most of his opportunities if he has to concentrate his efforts at least part of the time to his own playing. A player cannot keep his mind on the play before him, or what the pitcher is tossing up to him, if he has to worry about the make-up of his ball club in general, the strategy to be employed the following inning, or the exigencies of the moment brought on by his own pitcher's ineffectiveness or his team's inability to solve the opposing pitcher's delivery.

"You're asking one man to do two men's work at once.

"It just can't be done."

To back up his opinion further, Breadon offers the experiences of George Sisler, Ty Cobb, Dave Bancroft and others who stepped into the managerial ranks before their playing days were ended, and not only failed to set brilliant records as managers, but found their playing suffering as a result of the "doubling in brass."

Harper Is Traded

George Harper, shown above, veteran outfielder of the New York Giants, has been traded to the St. Louis Cardinals for Bob O'Farrell, catcher and former manager of the Cardinals, in a trade which involved only the two players.

Albia, Iowa.—Having his hair cut on his twenty-first birthday has brought $1,000 to Joe Kametz, of this place.

LEAP TO DEATH ON MOSCOW STAGE

Two Dancers Seek Solution of Love Tangle.

Moscow.—Agnessa Koreleva and Natalie Asksenova, beautiful ballet dancers, both aged twenty, gave a tragic touch the other night to the latest revolutionary ballet called "Red Poppy," when they plunged to death from the uppermost flies of the stage in full view of the public and just as the curtain was about to fall.

Both girls, their hands tied, crashed in midstage just as the thunderous revolutionary hymn, "The Internationale," was struck up by the orchestra.

Fellow-dancers, who knew the girls intimately, expressed the belief that the women had formed a suicide compact growing out of an unusual romance. They said that the girls had fallen in love with a scenery painter named Kurilko, who lately has become renowned for his art.

Devoted to each other and yet both desperately in love with the painter it was thought that the dancers preferred a common death as the best way out of the situation.

The ballet is packed full of revolutionary heroic exploits, and to the spectators at a distance, who had not heard the agonized cry of the dancers drowned as it was in the thunderous music, the leap seemed like a novel stage feat effected with dummies.

To the corps de ballet, however who at that moment came from the wings advancing to midstage in a dance of revolutionary triumph, the tragedy was only too apparent in all its grewsome aspects. Before their eyes lay the two girl friends, the one dead and the other just breathing.

The curtain fell immediately, hiding from the audience the panic and tears of the ballerinas.

The police authorities immediately began an investigation into the deaths. The theatrical manager advanced the theory that a suicide compact had been agreed upon by the girls growing out of circumstances not yet ascertained, but fellow-artists were convinced that the girls' mutual romance with the painter was the true reason.

Dies Minute Too Soon to Make Will Secure

Boston.—William J. Healy of Malden, who died recently while signing his will, might not have precipitated a lawsuit had he lived a minute longer.

He was expiring as the attorney finished the will. The latter shoved a pen into his hand and supported him while the dying man traced the beginning of his name.

The "W" was completed and then a scrawling line—and at that point Healy could write no more. The attorney said quick, "Make a cross," and he held the hand while the cross was traced. Then Healy fell back—dead.

The cross constitutes a valid signature, the law says, but the will is to be contested because the witnesses did not sign the will until after Healy was dead.

The law provides that the will must be signed by the witnesses in the presence of the testator. Healy died a moment too soon.

Boy, Aged Nine, Accused of Robbing Six Stores

Baltimore, Md.—A nine-year-old boy was trapped by policemen here, accused of breaking into six stores and robbing the cash registers of three. The Juvenile court placed him in care of a Children's Aid society. The front windows of the stores had been smashed in with a milk bottle.

When they saw the shattered doors and windows of the six places the police concluded that the demolition had been done by an insane person or a drunken man. Patrolmen stationed themselves at advantageous points and maintained a watch for the miscreant. Soon, they said, they were surprised to see a small boy, armed with a milk bottle, about to make an attempt to break into a Seventh street store.

The lad's name was withheld by police. He is the youngest person ever arrested in Baltimore on robbery charges.

BIRD FASHION

"It's the fashion in Birdland, or Bird Air as I call it," said Mother Oriole, "to move twice a year.

"We were late in coming North this summer."

"Do we move again, later on?" asked the children.

"Ah, yes," said Mother Oriole, "we move when the autumn comes. That is the fall of the year—when winter is beginning to pack his bags.

"We go south then.

"Now we are where it is warm in the summer, though in the winter it becomes very cold, and so when the winter is approaching we fly away again.

"The autumn tells us that winter is coming. Mr. Autumn is Mr. Winter's messenger boy, you see.

"We're here in this beautiful garden where there is this lovely tree we love so much.

"Now that we're here we'll sing and have concerts. We'll have feasts and make merry all the day long, day after day."

Mr. and Mrs. Oriole.

"How gorgeous," said the little orioles.

They were of the most beautiful colors, this family of orioles, and as they flew along they were a lovely sight.

"Now we must stop," said Mother Oriole, after they had gone a good long distance, on a little sight-seeing trip.

They all stopped, and the children rested and had refreshments and then went back to their tree.

"In yonder white house," said Mother Oriole when they were back, "lives a little girl.

"She is not very strong and can't play as much as other children can.

"She reads and paints and writes and sings. Her name in Joan.

"And every year when we come back for the summer we live near her home and we give her concerts.

"We must give her one now. The first one of the season."

So they all gave a concert. Joan recognized Mr. and Mrs. Oriole from the window, and she knew who the little extra orioles were!

She sent them out some bread crumbs and water which was her "thank you" for the concert.

And she knew that summer had really, really come.

Hunt the Ball

In this game all the players stand in a circle, except one; he is the hunter. This odd player must stand in the middle of the circle with his eyes blindfolded, and sing any little song or chorus he likes. Meanwhile all the players pass the ball round behind their backs from one to the other.

When the hunter stops singing the players must immediately stop passing the ball; the hunter will pull off the handkerchief which has blindfolded his eyes, and make a guess as to who has the ball. He is allowed two guesses. If he guesses right, then the holder of the ball has to take his place, and so the game goes on. If he doesn't guess right, then he is blindfolded again, and has to make another guess.

If any of the players drop the ball in passing it, they have to stand out of the game for a couple of rounds.

Had Enough to Eat

Johnny had been the guest of honor at a party the day before, and his friend, Paul, was regarding him with envious eyes.

"How was it? Have a good time?" he asked.

"Did I?" was the emphatic answer. "I ain't hungry yet!"

Big Fellow Was Hollow

The stout man on the scales was eagerly watched by two small boys. The man dropped in his cent, but the machine was out of order and registered only 75 pounds. "Good night, Bill," gasped one of the youngsters in amazement, "he's hollow!"

A Peep at Seasons

The teacher was giving a lesson on the seasons.

"Now, tell me, Johnny," he said, "which is the proper time to gather fruit?"

"When the dog's chained up," replied Johnny.

BUSINESS AS A CAREER

(Address delivered by Oriel Fischer at Jefferson Union high school commencement exercises.)

Many high school students in years past have had the erroneous idea that the boy or girl who did not plan to go on to college had little chance for success. Some of our own teachers attended high schools in which only college preparatory courses were offered. The natural tendency for them was to plan for college or university to train for one of the professions, such as teaching, law, the ministry, or medicine. Thus, there is still the impression, a heritage from the past, that real honorable and worth while achievement necessitates a university training for everyone who can possibly get it.

Since our school population has increased within recent years, as a result of compulsory attendance laws, many students who did not intend to go to the university or who are not qualified for such training have come into the schools. Many of these students are not interested in the professions, but are planning careers in the trades or in some phase of business. To meet these divergent interests, high school curricula have been enlarged and enriched to provide training for us who do not plan to attend a university. Our own high school trustees have provided training for us in mechanics, home economics and the commercial subjects. We are glad that in this high school we have had the opportunity to receive training in such subjects.

I speak for those students of us who are vitally interested in business as a life career. I desire not to discount those representatives of previous classes who have spoken about the desirability of going on to the university. I do believe very sincerely that there is a great opportunity here in our particular locality for a business career without a university training. In our high school the commercial training offered is very thorough. If one has done his work well here, he is qualified to make a start in some phase of business work. The business world usually rewards efficiency in workmanship in the form of promotions. If a person is worthy and capable, he will progress.

We recognize today that every honest occupation is a worthy one. In the business life of our country, especially of our immediate community, some of us are going to find the type of work which will challenge the best qualities we possess. We are grateful for the training this community, through Jefferson Union high school, has given us. We look forward to a career in business with the desire to contribute our share in the building up of our community and maintenance of our civilization.

TO VOTE A DUTY

There has become noticeable an alarming tendency towards apathy in public affairs, especially the selection of public officials, on the part of the citizens of the country. The percentage of eligible voters voting has shown an almost steady decline for the last two or three decades.

Statistics show that in 1896, 80 per cent of the eligible voters in the United States went to the polls and voted. In 1900 the percentage had dropped to 73. In 1908 it went down to 66 per cent, and in 1920 the President was elected by a majority of the minority, since only 49 per cent exercised their privilege of franchise. In 1924, after an active "Get Out the Vote Campaign," this was raised to where the majority voted.

The approaching elections are not far off. Again it will be up to the people to decide upon the right man to occupy the highest office in our country. This privilege should not be ignored, or regarded lightly. In fact, it is not only a privilege and a right, but it is a duty. Those who shirk this duty are not performing their part in the administration of the country. A soldier who goes to sleep at his post in the time of war often loses his own life as well as endangers the lives of his comrades. Likewise, a citizen who neglects his duties and responsibilities of citizenship, who goes to sleep at the post or thoughtlessly neglects his obligations to the government, not only suffers by foregoing his own rights but is, in a manner, a detriment to the government.

Not only should every citizen vote, but he should also prepare himself to vote intelligently. It has been the theory that a few could goven better than the whole. Doubtless this is true, because the few are better prepared. Then, in this country where the administration is in charge of representatives of the people that have been selected by those people, it is essential that everyone should educate himself in the necessary qualities of a candidate, that he may judge wisely; further, that one might not be swayed too easily by the mass of propaganda that is issue pro and con each candidate, but after carefully weighing the merits and qualifications of each will be capable of forming and exercising his own opinion.

It is hoped that every American, who enjoys the many rights and privileges bestowed upon him by being a citizen of this country, will show such appreciation by fulfilling his duty in exercising the right of franchise and cast his vote for the candidate whom after careful consideration he has determined is the best qualified. H.

ILLUSTRATED LECTURE AT METHODIST CHURCH

"Mountains and Human Life" will be the illustrated lecture for Sunday evening at the Daly City Methodist church. You will enjoy these pictures of Nature. Come and bring your friends.

Despite the fact that vacation is already upon us, the Sunday school is still making rapid strides, and is constantly growing. We have classes for all ages.

Communion with God is absolutely necessary if we are to build our lives upon a foundation that will abide. And so it is that man is ever searching for God, always breaking into the spiritual realm.

God is always ready and anxious to reveal Himself to hearts that earnestly search for Him. He is not far away, but is always close to every one.

"Speak to Him, for He is near thee,
And Spirit with Spirit will meet—
Closer is He than breathing,
And nearer than hands or feet."

Prayer: O Heavenly Father, the Author and Fountain of all truth, the bottomless sea of all understanding, send, we beseech Thee, Thy Holy Spirit into our hearts, and lighten our understandings with the beams of Thy Heavenly grace. We ask this, O merciful Father, for Thy dear Son, our Savior, Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.—Bishop Ridley (1500-1555.)

ELLIOTT L. FISHER, Pastor.

MAKING PREPARATIONS FOR TRAFFIC TANGLE DANCE

Under the joint auspices of the Alberian auxiliary of the Young Ladies' Institute, of which several young ladies of Daly City are members, and Pioneer Council of the Young Men's Institute, a Traffic Tangle dance is to be given Friday evening of next week at the Young Men's Institute Hall, 50 Oak street, San Francisco. Extensive arrangements have been made for this most pleasant affair, and many surprising features are in store for those who attend. Already assurances have been received of a record attendance, not only of the entire membership of the two organizations, with their many relatives and friends, but of scores of others affiliated with all other auxiliaries of both the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Institutes, as well as many connected with other societies.

Roland O'Farrell, a member of Washington Council of the Young Men's Institute, and his well known orchestra of jazz symphonists, are to furnish the music for the dance.

Miss Lena Buchignani, a popular young member of the Alberians, and Roy Norton, an equally prominent members of the Pioneers, are at the head of the joint committee in charge of the arrangements. Others equally active in furthering the details for the dance are the Misses Eunice Bunner, Beatrice Buchignani, Helen Cimino, Madeleine Cotter, Anit Davis, Grace Dillon, Bernice Dunphy, Peggy Dunphy, Maude Everson, Helen Kleyn, Rosanna Kleyn, Thelma Varni, Ann Mealley, Mary Sturica, Rosmarie Vetter, Helen Sutton, Miss Katherine Eagan, and the Messrs. Joseph Growney, Charles Crowley, Michael Timmons, Thomas Boles, Eugene Lynch, Paul Zink, Matt McLaughlin, Bert Larkin, Walter Lynch, Harry Hunt, Luke Tichenor, Harold O'Donnell, James I. "The fellow who killed the policeman died last night."

"Yes?"

"Yes, he sat on the electric chair and the shock was too great for him."

Neighbor: "What's all the loud talk in your house?"

Child: "Oh, father and mother are swapping animals."

Neighbor: "Swapping animals?"

Child: "Yes, mother passed the buck to him and got his goat."

Let us figure with you on the new house you are going to build.

Ideas are funny little things. They won't work unless you do.

"Just paid another $25 off the doctor's bill, darling."

"Splendid, Jack; one more payment and the baby's ours."

"How come you in jail, Rastus?"

"Sho' jes a case of mistaken identity."

"Who all did dey mistake yo' fo'?"

"I mistook a pro'bition officer for a good customer."

Employee: "I have been here 10 years doing three men's work for one man's pay. Now I want a raise."

Employer (slightly Scotch): "I can't give you a raise, but if you'll tell me who the other two men are I'll dischage them."

Are you willing to reduce your expenses? Get Coal of us and you will.

When a wife reigns she sometimes storms.

Wife: "Don't you think marriage has improved you, dear?"

Husband: "Sure thing—I was an idiot when I married you."

"Sterling," the Wall Board of satisfaction.

Look trouble in the face and laugh at it. P. S. Forget this advice in case your wife or boss happen to be your trouble.

Don't fatten a grudge. If you haven't enough nerve to kill it outright, let it die of neglect.

Now is the time to buy your winter Coal.
